CAMPAIGN IS CENTERED ON
U. S. SENATEBoth Parties Devoting Most
Time to Congressional Elections in Close
States Today.LOCAL ISSUES ARE HIGH Contest Hottest in New Hampshire and Connecticut Where G. O. P. Nominees Oppose Suffrage.By E. L. KEN (United Press Staff Correspondent) New York, Nov. 2.—Appreciating the very great advantage of having both the legislative and executive branches of the government of the same political faith, managers of the two big parties have devoted much time and energy and money to the congressional campaign.Inasmuch as the Republicans control the Senate now by only one vote (exclusive of that of Senator Newberry of Michigan who is awaiting appeal for a new trial on the charge of violation of the election laws), with the chances about even between Republicans and Democrats for control after March 4 next, the managers have largely concentrated on the senatorial fights in the critical states.These contests generally have been sugared with more vigor, and in some instances with more bitterness, than even the Presidential campaign. Although the League of Nations has been the "paramount issue" in the fight for the national tickets, it has been overshadowed in the senatorial campaign, in some of the States at least, by local issues.Thirty-four new Senators are to be chosen today, from thirty-three states, Alabama choosing two. According to the forecasts of political observers generally, it seems reasonably certain that the Republicans will return Senators from Vermont, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Kansas, North Dakota and Washington; while it appears equally certain that the Democrats will return their two from Alabama, and one each from Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Louisiana.

FOURTEEN STATES

The expected changes, if any, will come in the following states which the Republicans are hoping to retain in their list:
New Hampshire, Connecticut, Indiana, Iowa, Utah and Wisconsin; and in the following which the Democrats are striving to retain: Maryland, Kentucky, South Dakota, Idaho, Colorado, Arizona, Oregon and California.In no states of the thirty-three have contests for the senatorship been conducted with more energy than in New Hampshire and Connecticut, where Senators Moses and Brandegee have been subject to a hot Democratic fire on account of their "irreconcilability" with reference to the League of Nations. It was in these states that the chief irreconcilable senator, Borah, made his first appearance in the stump in the present campaign.While the Republicans profess to be confident of victory, the Democrats say they are equally sure of defeating both these senators, largely through the woman vote. Moses and Brandegee were both renowned anti-suffragists, and although Augustine Lonergan, Brandegee's opponent, is also opposed to women's voting, his support of the League is expected by the Democrats to attract the bulk of the feminine contingent in that state.

G. O. P. CLAIMS NEW YORK

In New York state also, which the Republicans are claiming for the national ticket by at least 100,000 although admitting that Senator Wadsworth will probably run slightly behind Harding, the Democrats are counting on a heavy woman vote, because of Wadsworth's opposition to suffrage. They are also expecting their candidate for Senator, Lt.
Gov. Harry Walker to poll well in the rural districts where he is said to be especially popular.The situation in Maryland is generally regarded as close, with the chances favoring the return of Senator Smith, Democrat, against Orrington E. Weller, Republican.Notwithstanding that the senatorship in Ohio is classed by the political experts as reasonably safe for former Gov. Frank P. Willis, the Democrats insist that their candidate, W. A. Julien, has a good chance, although as a rule they admit he will run behind Gov. Cox in that state.
In Indiana, the contest between Senator Watson, Republican, and Thomas Taggart, Democrat, has been sharp and lively. The Republicans admit it is a hard fight, and they generally concede Watson will run behind the national ticket. Democrats say that even if the State should go for Harding, which they say they don't expect, the latter would have to get a majority of at least 25,000 to carry Watson along with him.

CLOSE IN KENTUCKY

The senatorial result in Kentucky is likely to be very close. An especially fierce contest has been fought between Senator Beckham, Democrat, and Richard P. Ernst, Republican, in which the wet or dry has been prominent, with Beckham on the dry end.Missouri is classed among the doubt-fuls, especially on account of the uncertainty of the reaction following Senator Spencer's altercation with President Wilson over what the President is reported to have told the Rumanians and Serbs at the peace conference. Republicans contend that he has about an even chance of defeating Brookridge Long, the Democratic candidate, while Democrats are expecting Spencer to be cut somewhat by his own party on account of his association with Jake Babler, who was involved in the Lowden pre-convention fund inquiry.Senator Cummins, in Iowa, is reported to have had some difficulties in his campaign and Democrats are freely predicting that unless Harding and Coolidge carry the state by 100,000 they will have a fair chance of sending Claude R. Porter to the Senate.

TO GIVE SIX CONCERTS

Phi Mu Alpha to Bring Noted Artists Here This Season.Phi Mu Alpha, musical fraternity in the University, is announcing its annual concert season. A special rate will be allowed this year to students who buy season tickets. These tickets will entitle the holder to attend six programs, the first of which comes November 11.
The money from the ticket sale is used to defray the expenses of bringing artists here.The organization, which is offering its series of concerts for the fourteenth consecutive year, is a musical society in the University and has for its object the presentation of the best in music, and to offer such advantages in this respect as are afforded otherwise only in the larger cities. These series, the first of which was given in 1907-1908 and consisted of one concert, have grown this year to a series of six, including some of the greatest artists touring the country this season.
Eddy Brown, who with Spaulding divides honors as the greatest living American violinist, opens the season on November 11. He is a pupil of Hubay and Auer, and had already gained notable success in Austria, France, Germany and Holland before returning to this country three years ago.Brown is followed by Werrenrath, the prominent American baritone, who is known in this country both for his work on the stage and for the numerous rec-ords made for the Victor Company. He is a member of the Metropolitan Opera Company.The Zoellner String Quartet, which appeared on the Phi Mu Alpha series several seasons ago, represents the chamber-music side of musical art, and will offer the December concert.After Christmas, three other programs will be offered. E. Robert Schmitz, the young Abatist pianist who appears here January 10, is making his first extended American tour this season. From press notices in the east, where he is performing now, he seems to be attracting considerable attention by his renditions of modern works. Lambert Murphy, tenor, who sings here February 9, and Mabel Garrison, equally well-known as a colorature soprano, appearing March 16, bring the series to a close.Phi Mu Alpha members say that an effort has been made to secure a series of programs this year that would appeal to every music lover in Columbia, and that they expect this to be the most successful year since the first concert was given in 1907.

A boy, far in Academic Hall?

That is what person thought who saw H. K. Hannah, a freshman in the University, jump from a window of the reading room long after the closing hour one night recently.It was learned later that the weary freshman fell asleep while studying.
Students were disinclined to disturb him.
The librarian in charge failed to notice him at closing time, put out the lights
